

We Were Once Wolves: Dogsledding in the Boreal Forest- Brad Muir

Tuesday, February 13th 7:00pm

How similar or different are wild, grey wolves compared to the husky sled dog of today? What has resulted from more than 10,000 years of close human and wolf interaction? The answers to these questions may be surprising! Let's see, hear, smell, taste and feel a bit of the world of wild canids and domestic sled dogs using examples from the boreal forest of Saskatchewan. This lively program of discovery and respect for the ecosystem and its canine representatives uses images, demonstrations and activities.

Bradley Muir is a career heritage interpreter with Parks Canada and nature guide for his endeavors with Sundogs Excursions. From Sundogs yard in the forest near Anglin Lake he helps guests from around the world cue in to the natural sense of wonder assisted by 34 sled dogs.
